Summary: Fear is a feeling Toothless used to know. A poem about Toothless's first encounter with Hiccup from Toothless's perspective.

Fear is

Fear is

frozen wings in flight

bound by flying vines

as the earth stretches her green skin to engulf me

Fear is

the hollow in my tail

where lightning once blazed and guided my path

through the skies

Fear is

green eyes

on a skinny Viking boy

wielding an iron flint

to take my life

Fear is
knowing death will come not in battle
nor in glory
nor in fire
but imprisoned on the earth Fear is reflected in his eyes where I thought the fire of hate would blaze
and I do not understand Fear is
breaking with the bonds he cuts with his deadly flint and I don not understand but I am free Fear is
what I am
roaring in his face lightning and power and death but Fear is
not all I am I am just and fair
and for a life spared a life I can spare as well Fear is
a feeling I used to know but no more
with the small Viking beside me we fly where it cannot reach us

Fear is

a memory

and now I smile the way he does and he smiles in mirror and I forget

End
file.
